The International Electrotechnical Commission (IEC) is a non-governmental federation of National Committees from around 84 countries, with its Central Office located in Geneva, Switzerland, representing all the industrial countries in the world. The IEC (established in 1906) is the world's leading organization that prepares and published International Standards for all electrical, electronic and related technologies — collectively known as "Electrotechnology".

IEC standards cover a vast range of technologies from power generation, transmission and distribution to home appliances and office equipment, semiconductors, fibre optics, batteries, solar energy, nanotechnology and marine energy as well as many others.

Each year IEC holds its General Meeting in the country of one of its National Committees and, in addition to the management meetings, any number of Technical Committees and Subcommittees of the IEC meet to develop standards in specific areas of interest.

As the official host, the United States looks forward to your attendance at this meeting.

If you have any questions regarding the meeting, please do not hesitate to contact:
